St. Paul's. Built on the site of a temple to Diana, the camp of the Pretorian Guard, and a church founded by Ethelbert in 607, St. Paul's is one of a succession of churches. Old St. Paul's was begun in 1087 by Maurice, Bishop of London, and completed in 1315, and the present Cathedral is the work of Sir Christopher Wren. It is entirely built of Portland stone in the shape of a Latin cross; its entire length is 500 ft., its width 180 ft., while the great dome is 145 ft. in diameter. The clock tower holds Great Paul (17½ tons), the biggest bell in England.
